

Lucille White and her job as Lehi City Treasurer

While I was working there, Mayor Westring would come in and he asked me one day if I'd like to work at the city offices. Someone was retiring so he said to put my application in, so I did and I got the job. And I went to work there.

There was a lady that—she was the city Treasurer and she worked there for about a year and a half after I had come and she quit—so they put me in as Lehi's City Treasurer, and I was the Treasurer for about fourteen-and-a-half years.

I worked under four different Mayors. I liked Mayor Westring, he was a good man, and Morris Clark, he was very good. And then we had Calvin Swenson and then Evan College, and he was there when I retired.

I don't remember what I was paid. But I remember—I remember it was more than the Café and I was glad to have a better job.

Well, it was hard work. But it wasn't a lot of money. When I started working, I think we used to send out about 500 bills every month. I sent all the bills. We had a machine that would make up the bills and a sheet per family. And I would do the postage after they had paid and I would post the amount they had paid.

Well, it didn't change a lot while I was there. But it has certainly changed now. My fondest memories is that I just liked working for the city. Ned Wilson, he was very good. And just before I retired, Ned quit and took another job and they put another person in his place that I didn't get along as well with.

Yes the money would always balance. I would take the money to the bank every day that we would count and the register would tell us how much was taken and we'd have to balance the amount taken and I'd have to take it every day to the bank. In fourteen-and-a-half years it always balanced.
